

Summer Projects

It looks like most of my summer projects will have to wait until next year for completion. The nagging cough that I've had for the past two months has been confirmed as congestive heart failure. I get to have my failing replacement aortic pig valve changed out for a new mechanical heart valve, and in just 3 short months I'll be able to hobble around with a modicum of discomfort.

Glad I was able to finish the corn sheller before things went all to h*ll.

On the good side I have had the good fortune to set up many winter projects and if I can sneak past SWMBO out to the shop this winter I may just be able to recover my place in the Project list. Not that I want to rush into anything of course!!